

Dear Hiring Manager,

To start, let me express my deepest gratitude for your time and attention. I understand how valuable both of those are to you. Writing this letter gives me wondrous joy as I am honored to have an opportunity to even be considered for such a position at a growing company as regarded at Allbirds. I am thoroughly impressed with your image, infrastructure, philosophies and repertoire. My wife is actually an avid wearer of your shoes and owns multiple pairs.

It's these reasons, as well as what I understand of your company culture that make Allbirds one that I would be proud to work for.

So why hire me?

Apart from being a generally pleasant person to be around, I will add significant value to my team and my clients, both in a leadership and hands-on role. I bring to the table a unique blend of experience, aptitude & abilities. These include, but not are limited to strategy, management and creation. I like to think outside the box and don't mind stirring the pot. I have worked with agencies and independently, for start-ups and Fortune 500 companies. I am ready to start this new chapter in my life with a strong company delivering a product as important as Allbirds. I intend to exceed expectations every step of the way, building new relationships, acquiring new skills and further developing myself.

Why not hire me?

Don't hire me if you aren't looking for a leader and a team player who shows up on-time, is passionate about their work and goes the extra mile to get the job done. Also, if you would rather someone with less experience, with less technical proficiency or someone that is less adaptable.

In a nutshell, I feel I would be an invaluable asset to Allbirds and I hope you feel the same.

Thank you again for your time and attention. I hope you enjoyed reading this as much as I enjoyed writing it. I seriously look forward to meeting you and further discussing this position. Let's pave new paths together.

Most Sincerely,

Ben Miller

"You're going to like the way I work."
